3. The following information regarding Agent Cashiers may be of interest. The Chief of the Monetary Branch and five of his senior officers, all of whom are bonded, are officially designated Agent Cashiers by the Treasury Department. Four of them are authorized to carry advances from the Treasury of [REDACTED]. Agent Cashiers do not have access to either the Treasury checks issued to their order or to the preprinted checks which they draw against their bank accounts. All of these are held by the Custodian of the Monetary Branch and are only endorsed or signed by the Agent Cashiers when presented by the Custodian and accompanied by a Certified Voucher. We believe that these internal controls governing the handling of Agent Cashier funds provide adequate protection against misuse and are comparable to those of other financial institutions handling large sums of money.
